

Seda Unsar got her BA from Koç University, and PhD from USC (University of Southern California). Having completed her term as a visiting scholar at London School of Economics, and as a Max Weber postdoctoral scholar at EUI (European University Institute), she joined the Department of Political Science and International Relations at Yeditepe University as an Associate Professor. Her research interests include: the political economy of Ottoman institutional modernization, secularism, Western political thought, and Islamic political thought, the political economy of neoliberalism, and the Middle East.